James Gorman, a bath-house attendant employed at the foot of West Eighty-second street, saw the accident and rushed to the boy. Making a fourniquet out of a p.ece of cloth he checked the flow of olood and seizing a herse and huggy belonging to a street cleating inspector standing near by he drove at breakneck speed to Roosevelt Hospital. There it was said that Gorman's prompt action had probably saved the boy from bleeding to death before an ambulance could reach him.

After years of experience I have need that the advantage gained by the long reach is not commensurate with the power put forth. As for the 'scissors' kick I have found that I could get a better purchase on the water by kicking directly back and not first spreading the legs and them bringing them forcibly together.

"How do I manage to get a rest when tired? Well, that is a question that involves the explanation of a stroke that is original with myself. It is very much like the simole stroke called doggie that boys use when they first learn to swim. Instead of lying fat on the stomach. I lie just a little to one side, and do not paddle, but with bent el-bows and a sidewise motion, with first one palm and then the other, draw the water toward me. As a result I shoot as in the other stroke; in auct. I thick that my simple, natural, straight back-and-forth kick is the most effective under all conditions.

"The queerest part of it all is that college swimming teachers now mark a boy deficient who uses that kick. Club-foot, they call it.

"There is no healthier exercise than swimming in all the world. I have heard often that much bathing is weak-ening. Pure nonsense. I wonder if people will believe that I have trained in the water for weight-lifting contests. Do I look as though I had been weakened?"
